

Bulletin 16 – 16 July 2024

Welcome to our sixteenth (and final) bulletin of the First Actuarial Monkey Euros 2024. Throughout the tournament, we've given you regular updates on the latest happenings from Germany, and the final standings in our competition are below to show you how well (or not!) you've done.

Spain 2 – 1 England

It was heartbreak for England once more, as the 58-year wait filled with pain and disappointment continues following defeat in yet another Euros final.

English spirits were high following the first 45 minutes, where, despite Spain controlling much of the play, resilient defending and occasional glimpses of a counter-attack left English fans dreaming that this could finally be the year. The Spaniards quickly dashed all English hopes following the break, taking the lead just 70 seconds into the second half. Cole Palmer's emphatic 73rd-minute equaliser restored the nation's optimism and left the country thinking victory was written in the stars. 96th minute overhead kicks, winning in Germany on penalties, 90th minute semi-final winners - surely this time it's coming home?

Unfortunately not. Spain proved too strong once again, retaking control of the game and sinking English hopes with an 87th minute goal to win the game 2 – 1, and be crowned kings of Europe for a record fourth time. Onto 2026.

Results

For the first time since 2000, the Euro's golden boot was shared between multiple players - 6 to be exact. Harry Kane was successfully named as one of these by 38 participants, but only Lizzy Cook and Michael O'Donnell were able to predict any of the other 5 top goal-scorers, guessing Cody Gakpo and Dani Olmo respectively.

In the race for top-spot it was Hugo Berry that managed to take the Euro 2024 Monkey League crown, correctly guessing the Spain / Kane double. Daniel Smith, like many others, showed too much patriotism in predicting England to win, and as a result is left to take 2nd place.

A dominant display from start to finish secured Zoe Sadler this year's wooden spoon, occupying last position from day one.

A huge thanks to everyone who has taken part – we hope you enjoyed it! Keep an eye out at the start of August for our domestic Monkey League entry form for the 24/25 season.
